World Communion Sunday

Prelude

Welcome and Announcements

*Call to Worship

From north and south, from east and west, we come;

God's people called to the Table where simple grace nourishes us.

From down the street to across town, from single households to apartment dwellers,

God's people are called to community.

Where we live and serve one another from every class, every race, and every status, from little ones with sippy cups to elders with overflowing hearts,

God's people are called to witness to God's hope,

God's people are called to offer peace to a shattered world.

*Hymn 1 Holy, Holy Holy

Prayer of Confession

Merciful God,

we confess that we have sinned against you in thought, word, and deed, by what we have done, and by what we have left undone.

We have not loved you with our whole heart and mind and strength.

We have not loved our neighbors as ourselves.

In your mercy, forgive what we have been,

help us amend what we are, and direct what we shall be,
so that we may delight in your will and walk in your ways,
to the glory of your name. Amen.

*Hymn 698 Take, O Take Me As I Am

Assurance of Forgiveness

Hear the good news!

The saying is sure and worthy of full acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.

He himself bore our sins in his body on the cross, that we might be dead to sin and alive to all that is good.

I declare to you in the name of Jesus Christ, your sins are forgiven. Be at peace. Amen.

The Morning Message

The air conditioning in my car went out some time ago. It was finally scheduled for repairs last week, meaning Ed and I made two trips to the Honda dealership in South Charleston. On our way home on Friday night we stopped for dinner at a place we like in Teays Valley. Ed arrived first, but, he told the hostess I may have beat him because I had a head start. Could he just walk thru the restaurant to see if I might already be there?

To which the hostess replied, “Well. Do you know what she looks like?”

We got a lot of mileage out of that this weekend.

When we entered the sanctuary today, we probably noticed something different. The paraments have been changed to white. The Table is set for Communion, the holy meal to which Jesus calls us.

We know what it looks like.

Bread and wine. Simple. And profoundly filling. Food and drink were important to Jesus. The first of the miracle stories happened at a wedding in Galilee. He turned water into wine. Then he multiplied a little boys lunch of bread and fish to feed thousands of hungry people. He read a poignant story of Jesus being the dinner guest at the home of Lazarus, Mary, and Martha. After the resurrection, he shows up at the beach to cook breakfast. Food is important to Jesus.

Who remembers their high school love interest? I clearly remember one boyfriend. We had a debate one day: Which is better- to live to eat or eat to live?

He argued that I seemed to live to eat, whereas, he had taken the better, higher understanding- he ate to live.

I fired that boyfriend.

Today Christians around the globe are celebrating World Communion Sunday, a day when we are urged to embrace the Biblical vision of unity and peace. Not as a far-off dream, but as Christ’s calling to us.

World Communion Sunday is a gift of the Presbyterian Church to the larger ecumenical body of Christ. The first observance was at the Shadyside Presbyterian Church in Pittsburgh, in 1933. The Rev. Dr. Hugh Thompson Kerr was the pastor. It was from his vision that the day was set apart for the purpose of promoting peace and global witness. Years later, his son, the Rev. Dr. Donald Kerr, reflected on his father's vision.

“The concept spread very slowly at the start. People did not give it a whole lot of thought. It was during the Second World War that the spirit caught hold, because we were trying to hold the world together. World wide Communion symbolized the effort to hold things together, in a spiritual sense. It emphasized that we are one in the Spirit and the Gospel of Jesus Christ.”

It seems to me, we are trying to hold the world together in the 21st century. Hurricane Ian wrought all kinds of destruction in recent days, the pandemic just keeps raising its ugly head, cereal is $5.00 a box, civic unrest seems ever more contentious, many have experienced job insecurity, food insecurity exists even here in our community. That should not happen.

Noted theologian, Karl Barth, is remembered for saying this about preaching: “Hold the Bible in one hand and the newspaper in the other.” Faith, apart from real life, is irrelevant.

Rev. Christine Chakoian of Los Angeles says the first time she heard the gospel preached that way wasn't at her church, but in her parents' family room. It wasn't from a pulpit, but a record player. It was Simon and Garfunkel's “7 O'Clock News/Silent Night.”

Silent Night is one of our most beloved Christmas carols, a lullaby that the Christ Child and the world he came to save, would “sleep in heavenly peace.”

But, in this particular recording, over that carol, another sound intrudes, growing louder and louder. The voice of a reporter announces that demonstrators have been forcibly evicted from the US House of Representatives. And then the grim announcement that unless there is a substantial increase in the effort in Viet Nam, the US should look forward to five more years of war.

And then the reporter signed off, “That's the 7 o'clock news. Good night.”

Christine Chakoian says she has been thinking about that Simon and Garfunkel song a lot lately, and Barth's words of preaching advice. There is a taught tension between the Bible's vision for the world and the world's news. Let's consider just a few.

The Bible says: “No more shall there be the sound of weeping, or the cry of distress.”

The New York Times says: “An incalculable Loss: America has reached a grim milestone in the Coronavirus outbreak.”

The Bible says: “They shall build houses and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and eat their fruit.”

The newspaper says: Political Battle Erupts Over Homeless Encampment on Venice Boardwalk.”

The Bible says: “The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, the lion shall eat straw like the ox.”

The newspaper says: Collateral Damage of COVID-19: Rising rates of domestic and social violence.

We find these competing truths in our own town. What are we supposed to do? God promises peace, but violence exists, poverty exists, disease and death exist.

One way we can respond is to just look the other way. Don't concern ourselves with social ills. Ignore the Bible. It's irrelevant today. It certainly doesn't compel many people to action. Judging by the inactivity in my own neighborhood on Sunday mornings, I'd say this is the prevalent attitude.

But, Christians have to do better than that.

We could take the eschatological approach and lean into the time to come when Christ returns to make all things new and establish the peaceable kingdom. God will take care of this in God's good time. No worries. This approach reminds me of a high school friend of mine who decided not to apply for college admission because he believed the Rapture, or Christ's return, was imminent.

We could concentrate on our personal salvation. It is important. Jesus saves. Our eternal security is sealed. But, Jesus saves us for what purpose? What is the work or mission to which Jesus has called us?

Christine Chakoian says we could set all those approaches aside and try another way- the prophetic way. “A way that lifts up God's end game vision and at the same time, opens our hearts to let Christ make a difference now.”

That's the prophetic way, the Gospel way-where God's reign can be real, even now. Where peace is not a pipedream, where God assures that none of his beloved sheep goes hungry.” Is that too naïve, too idealistic? Or is there a way to embrace that vision for the world God created and loves?

Seminary Professor Fred Craddock shares this story of how the reconciliation of faith and current events came together in his classroom.

At the beginning of many seminary classes, a student leads the class in prayer or shares a brief devotion. Maybe the student brings along a guitar and invites everyone to sing a hymn or chorus. This was a part of seminary education that I loved. Every lecture, every assignment, was wrapped in the Word read and proclaimed, and sealed with prayer.

On this particular day the student leading devotions stepped up to the front of the class with her yellow legal pad. It had a lot of writing on it. Fred thought this could take a long time.

The student spoke softly, first in one foreign language, then another-one sentence repeated over fifty times in different languages. Fred said it was only when she spoke in German, Spanish and French, that he began to understand what she was saying. She ended in English with these words: "Mommy, I'm hungry." And then she sat down.

Jesus asked Peter, "Do you love me? Feed my sheep."
Jesus asks all of us here, "Do you love me? Feed my sheep."

Christine Chakoian offers these thoughts to us who are even now praying about the world's great problems and waiting in hope for the coming kingdom:

"Cynicism is the fate of realists who clearly see the present, but see nothing of God's vision for the way the world could really be. That vision is before us now: where wolves and lambs can feed together; where all of God's hungry children are fed at the table of grace."

It takes some imagination and not a little courage to live into God's vision. But, that is the call of Christ on our lives: to feed his sheep, so that every single one of the children of earth is fed- fed with security, fed with love... and bread.

Prayer after Communion      And the Table Will Be Wide by Jan Richardson

And the table will be wide.
And the welcome will be wide.
And the arms will open wide to gather us in.
And our hearts will be open wide to receive.

Women: And we will come as children who trust there is enough.
And we will come unhindered and free.
And our aching will be met with bread.
And our sorrow will be met with wine.

Men: And we will open our hands to the feast without shame.
And we will turn toward each other without fear.
And we will give up our appetite for despair.
And we will taste and know of delight.

All: And we will become bread for a hungry world.
And we will become drink for those who thirst.
And the blessed will become the blessing.
And everywhere will be the feast.

*Hymn 500 Be Known to Us In Breaking Bread

*Charge and Blessing

Go out into the world in peace, rejoicing in the power and the presence of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

Today we celebrate the Sacrament of Communion with our brothers and sisters the world over, uniting in purpose and prayer. To receive the elements, come forward when invited, remove a cup from the tray, and return to your seat. We will eat and drink together when all have been served. If you prefer to remain seated, the elements will be brought to you.
